The asking has grown easy in my throat, for centuries, it seems,
as tight and thick
as a second sheath of skin.
Oh, I can ring a rosy question around anyone who'll gamble at an answer, and he can never win though some will try the tongues of angels some, the grainy tongues of men.

But, now some stranger shouts that I am come a man and I must pass the well-turned inquiry — the spelling bee —
and will my fluted phrases turn quite so glibly now?

The answering does not grow in my throat and speech sticks hard like splintered fishbones, there — answer, answer, who's got the answer?
no answer — just cymbals, clanging noisy,
dumbly,
on the air,
And so, my tongue must sit,
a wooden clapper,
heavy on the syllables,
caught hollow on the jaw, lapsed humble, at last,
into a purging peace.

— Elaine G. Carroll
